

Barrington Coffee Roasting Company: fanatical about great coffee

Success in business can be attributed to many factors: hard work, persistent effort, good luck, personal connections, and a firm handshake. But none of these has the kind of guarantee that devotion to one's craft provides. Devotion, total commitment, fanaticism: these are good words to describe the power-coffee duo of Gregg Charbonneau and Barth Anderson of Barrington Coffee Roasting Company.

Barth Anderson and Gregg Charbonneau

The devotion at Barrington coffee is hands-on. Decidedly not a giant corporate empire, on any given day Gregg and Barth can be seen unloading bags of green coffee, cupping the new crop of Ethiopian beans or roasting for the day's production. A steady stream of coffee-centric conversation with customers and local devotees stopping by to pick up a quick pound of Barrington Gold Espresso Blend are all part of the daily culture at the Roastery.

Gregg and Barth founded Barrington Coffee Roasting Company in 1993. Having met in college, they quickly discovered their common love of everything coffee. Barth, an environmental scientist by education, was drawn to coffee at the age of 14 as a barista and he clearly hasn't shaken it since. Gregg started roasting coffee during his college years for a local coffeehouse and continued while building a career in art restoration. This combination of art and science is the foundation of their success.

Their business began as a response to a local need from many of the restaurants in the Berkshires, a Mecca of fine food and developed palates. Gregg and Barth quickly proved they could deliver a consistent supply of fresh, flavorful coffees that handily beat down the competition. Local success has led to a regional and national presence through their retail and wholesale mail-order operations. A wholesale account of note, The Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, MA is a long-term customer and fan of Barrington Coffee and uses their coffee in all of its ventures.

Gregg and Barth love coffee. They can tell you in detail about each origin they offer, the best way to store it, grind it, brew it and most importantly — truly enjoy it. Their obsession for excellence drives them to source the most superb and carefully cultivated coffees in the world. This is what keeps their customers coming back, again and again.
